Subscribe to our newsletter :.In recent years, the development of wireless communications such as Bluetooth (registered trademark), digital cellular phones, wireless LANs has been extensively carried out. The demand for radio frequency circuits and devices suitable for high frequency bands has been increasing. A structure called a "Si-CMOS" including both a CMOS logic circuit and a radio frequency circuit on the same chip has been proposed as a device structure that can operate in a microwave band. Although it is possible to manufacture a MOS transistor having a low source resistance by forming a source and a gate as a metal gate, the performance of the MOS transistor in the microwave band is degraded owing to scattering of the microwave power. Because of this, it is necessary to decrease parasitic capacitance and parasitic resistance to be as low as possible. On the other hand, a technique of forming a gate electrode having a silicon oxide film and a silicon nitride film laminated via a titanium nitride film as an electrode material has been known. According to this technique, a thin gate insulating film is formed on the titanium nitride film and the gate insulating film is formed again on the titanium nitride film with a silicon oxide film included between them. The gate insulating film sandwiched by the titanium nitride film helps to reduce the gate resistance. For this reason, it is important to make the silicon oxide film and the silicon nitride film as thin as possible. The Si-CMOS technique has a similar structure to one disclosed in Patent Document 1. According to Patent Document 1, a gate insulating film is formed in the interface between a gate electrode and a substrate, and the gate insulating film is formed again on the surface of the gate electrode with a nitride film included between them. By doing this, the gate insulating film sandwiched by the nitride film is formed thin. As a result, the gate resistance can be decreased.How much does The
